Address by Rev. J. J. Bullock, D. D. AT PRINCETON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, ON THE ERECTION OF A TABLET IN MEMORY OF JOHN BRECKINRIDGE, D. D.

When I received the invitation of your com' mittee to make an address on the life and character of the late Dr. John Breckipridge, on this interesting coession, as a Kentuckian and an old friend of Dr. Breckinridge and his family, I had not the heart to decline, though I well knew I had not the power to do justice to the high character and useful life of that distinguished man, who was for a short time a professir in this grand old school of the pro-

Is was not here, sir, that this great work for the Master was done. We must look beyond the walls of this Semioary to understand his life work, and yet it is meet that his name should be held in everlasting remembraces by those who have in charge the interests of this venerable institution, that an endowing tablet should be creeted to his memory, side by side with those great and good men whose lives were spent in the immediate work of educating and training the ministry for our Presbyterian Church; and well did they perform their grand mission, and all of them are enshrined in the heart of every true Presbyterian. For it was maichy through his unparalleled energy and surpassing elequence as the Secretary of the Assembly's Board of Education for five years, from 1831 to 1826, that there was so large an accession to the number of its students, and amole means were provided for their support.

During this period the number of beneficia ties of the Board was increased from 60 to 1,000. Dr. Nicholas Murray, in referring in after years to his appeals to pious young men to enter the fields ripe for the harvest, said:

"The elequetes of Dr. Breckinridge upon this subject, moving as the lyre of Orpheus, is yet ringing in our ears, though twenty winters have mounted over his grave. But few having a spark of spiritual life could resist." Dr. B. was been to fortune and an honored name: for prospects of worldly honor and emoluments to become an humble minister of the gospel. He consecrated nimself to Christ and The consecration was complete. Never after wards did he falter in his devotion to his Lord and Saviour. For twenty years he labored unceasingly and with all the energies of his body and soul, without any rest, in serving the Church of God: wherever duty called he un hesitationly went, ready to do any work and to make any sacrifices that were needful to advance the kingdom of Christ. The Presbytes rian Church, with its long list of able, godly and self sacrilizing ministers which the great Head of the Church has given her, has never contrined in her bosom one who loved her mere, or who was more willing to do and suffer for ber, than Dr. John Breckinridge. He lived not for fame, nor for any earthly reward, but for Christ. In all his splendid public efforts in the pulpit and on the platform he hid himself behind the cross of Christ. He held up that cross as the great of ject of attraction to admiring multitudes. One of the last sentences that be uttered before his elequent tongue was silenced by death was: "lam a poor sinner who have worked hard, and had constantly be fore my mind one great of jee; the conversion of the world."

Dr. James Alexander, who knew him well said of him: "I never saw him idle or loung. ing a moment, nor diverted to minor matters or levicy. I never saw him in any company, even of the most fashionable political grandee, where he did not take a high religious stand, and avow high Christian opinions, with an air of couscious superiority; and I never detected him in any sort of self pleasing or shrinking from sacr fices (r hard duty. I know no min ister whose private intercourse is so purely and zenlously religious." A grand tribute from a testimony to Dr. Alexander's noble tribute to the character of his deceased friend. Men and women are still living to Kentucky, in Baltimore, and elsewhere, who will tell you that no man, dead or living, ever exerted the same spiritual and cievating influence over them as did Dr. John Breckioridee. You can see his holy impress upon them after the lapse of almost fifty years. From 1838 to 1840, in obe-dience to the call of the General Assembly, he travelled all over this broad land to plead the cause of foreign missions, and the hearts of God's people were stirred for a peristing world by his glowing elequence and powerful appeals as they were never stirred before, and contri butions flowed isto the treasury in an unwonted stream, and young men and young women in ususual numbers offered themselves to go as missionaries to the heathen nations. I can never forget a sermon he preached in Frankfort, Ky., on the text, "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us; and therefore we ought to lay down our fives for the brethren." I have no hesitation in saying it was the most touchingly elo quent exhibition of the love of Christ I ever heard from the lift of man. His whole soul seemed to be aglow with love to Christ and in test upon the one great of ic: of the conversion of the world. He held his audience spell bound, and tears fell freely from eyes uoused to weeping in the house of God. Forty years have passed since then, but the image of the preacher, and the grand dectrine, and the sweet trilling tones of his musical voice, remain fresh in my memory. His great vital energy and deep devotion to the cause of Christ prompted him to labors beyond (is powers of endurance. He fell a sacrifice to his nowearied aline and Harris' Cement.

225 King St. pastorare in Baltimore, his reply was, "Dr. I would rather wear cut than rust cut in my Master's service;" and when he was on his way to New Orleans, in 1840, it was suggested to him by his friends in Kentucky that the climate would not suit his shattered constitution, he replied, in the heroic language of Whisfield, am immortal until my work is done."

Dr. Breckinridge was given to the Church for a great purpose and to do a great work, for which he was endowed with remarkable gifts and gree s. He had a bril int and highly oultivated mind, the most exquisite sensibilities the tenderest sympathier, and the most refined taste; he was of commanding stature, graceful in form and bearing, with handsome, noble features and winning manners, and a peculiarly expressive countenance; his voice was twict, clear and milodious, and he was possessed of that indescribable personal magnetism, of look and manner, that excited the love and admiration of all who were brought into intimate relations with him. In addition to these, he had the highest order of moral rectitude, combined with knightly chivalry and dauntless courage, guided and regulated by the true spirit of Christianity. He might well be styled the Christian koight, "without fear and without reproach," A braver man never lived. His eye never qualted in the presence of any mortal. It was expressive of womanly tenderness and of uncorquerable coursge. Fearing God, ne feared none others. The venerable Dr. Alexander truly said of him: "He was a man of great sweetness and strength of character." In the pulpit and on the platform he was sometimes transcendently elequent. In the social circle he was peerless, full of life and sympathy, combined with matchless grace and dignity. Dr. Murray, himself a fine example of Christian cheerfulness and genial humor, said of him: "His prosence in the family was always as bright sunshine, that cheered every one that came within its influence; even the little chil-

Dr. James Alexander gives emphatic testimony to the charm of his social nature. He says, speaking of his venerated father: "It was often remarked by the household that no one had the faculty of drawing forth his powers in animated convertation so fully at this years and and the faculty of drawing forth his powers in animsted conversation so fully as this warm and brilliant friend, and though Dr. B. was eminently remote from anything like undignified levity, he know so well how to present that side levity, he know so well how to present that side of any subject which was entertaining, that his presence used to make itself known by the peals of genuine laughter which would burst from the study. He was equally skilled to touch the chords of Christian pathos, and we may be allowed to say that the Church has seldom lost a man who more happily united tenderness and philosophic zeal with manly honor and high courage in his Master's cause. Fow men fluid a larger space in the view of the Caurch and the public, and few men could be taken from the earth who will be more missed." "He was indeed a burning and shining light." Yea, sir! a splendid representative of the christian ministry,—admired for his talonts, eloquence and chi-deed a burning and shining light." Ites, sit a splendid representative of the christian ministry,—admired for his talents, eloquence and chivalrous bearing, and loved for his unselfile, generous, tender hearted nature and ardent piety. In all the varied capacities and relations in which he was called to act, he acquitted himself with distinguished ability and success.

He finished his course early. He died on the 4th of August, 1811, at Cabell's Dale, the family seat, near Lexington, Ky., in the 45th year of his age, on the same spot where he was borned breathed his last in the bosom of his family, in his own dear Kentucky, which he loved with all the ardor and devotion with which as on loves his mother. He died calmly, peacefully, triumphantly. His last words were: 'God is with me'' His memory is precious; it will never perish. His crown is studded with many stars. "He was a man; take him for all in all, We shall not look upon his like again."
